Bingo Where Every Square Is a Life Actually Lived

everyone in this room has lived a life.

How to Run a Game

It's bingo — but instead of numbers, the squares are things people have actually lived. When a square gets marked, there's a story attached. That's the whole trick.

SETUP	4 to 16 players, one card each (there are ten different cards — photocopy freely). Pencils or big markers. 30-45 minutes.
CALL	Read phrases from the caller list in any order, big and slow, twice each. Cross them off the list as you go.
MARK	Players mark a square if it's true of THEM. On the honor system — and the honor system is where the stories come from.
TELL	Every few calls, pick someone who just marked a square: "Tell us about that." One sentence or five minutes, both fine.
WIN	Four in a row, any direction, wins the round. Play again — cards stay interesting because the stories change.

Prizes are optional and honestly unnecessary. The winning move is asking the quietest person in the room about the square everyone was surprised they marked.

Call in any order. Read each twice. Check off as you go.
