Thirty Questions for the Newest Person in the Room

HOW TO USE THIS

Being New Is the Hard Part

Moving somewhere new — at any age — means being surrounded by people who all seem to already know each other. This book is the shortcut.

It takes two: you, and someone you've just met. A neighbor, a tablemate, whoever sat down next to you. Both of you answer every question — nobody just interviews anybody.

START The early questions are easy on purpose. Coffee or tea is how strangers warm up.

KEEP GOING The questions get more personal as the pages go — the same way real trust does. Stop anywhere; skip anything.

TAKE TURNS One reads the question aloud, both talk, then both write. The talking matters more than the writing.

Ten pages in, you won't be strangers. Thirty pages in, you'll wish you'd met sooner. The last page tells you what to do about that.

ASK EACH OTHER

What's a place you lived that you still think about?

BEFORE YOU PUT THIS DOWN

Don't let it end here.

You just spent thirty questions becoming friends. Make it official: trade room numbers, phone numbers, or a standing coffee time — and write it below so neither of you can politely forget.
